FAQs for International Students on F-1 and J-1 Visas Re: COVID-19

Updated 3/16/20

Please be reassured that Rutgers University is closely monitoring and responding to the COVID-19 situation, and that we at Rutgers Global will continue to share additional information as soon as it becomes available. You should be monitoring the University’s coronavirus.rutgers.edu site, checking the Rutgers Global alerts, and regularly watching your Rutgers email inbox for updates from the university and our offices. For further information, especially concerning travel advisories, you should continue to follow the relevant U.S. Department of State (U.S.DOS) and CDC sites. Feel free to contact our office if you have any questions that are not answered by the FAQs below.

1. Where are the current travel bans?
The U.S. government has suspended entry for any non-U.S. citizens and non-permanent residents who were physically present within the following countries during the 14-day period preceding their entry to the U.S.

- People’s Republic of China (excluding Hong Kong and Macau)
- Islamic Republic of Iran
- European Schengen area countries - Austria, Belgium, Czech Republic, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Italy, Latvia, Liechtenstein, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Malta, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Slovakia, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden and Switzerland.
- United Kingdom and Ireland (as of Monday, March 16, midnight)

Please note that the situation is changing daily. Also, many countries are imposing immigration restrictions in order to contain the virus. For further information, please review travel advisories available from the U.S. State Department, the CDC, and the country/countries outside of the US from which you want to fly from or to. Feel free to contact our office if you have any other questions.

2. I am currently in the U.S. but was planning to travel outside of the U.S. soon. Should I cancel my trip?

Given the fluidity of the current situation, we are unable to advise one way or the other about international travel. This is a decision you will need to make keeping in mind all available information.

Even if your destination does not have any travel restrictions at this time, we cannot guarantee that the situation will remain the same at the time of your travel, as many countries are imposing travel restrictions in order to contain the virus. International students should also be aware of U.S. government-imposed travel restrictions if you consider travel outside the United States, and you may face difficulties when trying to re-enter the U.S., including being denied entry.

However, we understand that international students may want to return home to be with their families. As long as you have weighed the risks and then made your decision, please know that Rutgers Global will continue to support you and your legal status will remain active while you are utilizing the university’s remote instruction plan and otherwise remain compliant with applicable regulations. Should you choose to travel, make sure you have a valid travel signature or have requested a new one.
3. Rutgers has decided to move to remote instruction for all classes, until at least April 3, 2020. As an international student can I take these online classes and still remain in legal status?

We have received official guidance from the government that allows schools to temporarily adapt their policies and procedures in certain respects related to remote instruction to address issues associated with COVID-19. Based on this guidance and in keeping with President Barchi’s message regarding changes in the mode of instruction, F-1 and J-1 students who are currently enrolled in a program of study in the U.S. are able to participate in remote instruction offered by the university and maintain their legal status. Students must still remain enrolled in a full-course of study and continue to make normal progress towards their degree unless they qualify for a reduced credit/course load based on permissible exceptions. Please note that this is a temporary accommodation in place until in-person classes resume.

Students who leave the U.S. should consider future implications, such as difficulties with visa renewals, when returning to the U.S. if student is from a country with travel restrictions, etc. ISSS can help to advise students on a case by case basis.

4. Will I be able to continue taking online classes until the end of the semester?

Please note that classes have moved to remote instruction until April 3 for now. If classes resume in-person only (and no longer remotely) at that time, you will be expected (per government regulations) to return to classes on-campus to maintain your legal status.

At this time, we cannot confirm if remote instruction will be offered after April 3rd through the end of the spring semester. We will share information as soon as it becomes available.

If remote instruction is offered through the end of the spring semester, and you engage in the remote instruction and remain compliant with other applicable regulations, you will be considered to be maintaining your status until the end of the spring semester, and will then be entitled to your annual summer vacation (during which time no registration is required, unless it is your final term of study).

5. My visa is expiring soon. Can I travel home or to a third country to apply for a new visa?

International students should consider the following as they plan to travel out of the country to apply for a new visa:

- Students can remain in the U.S. with an expired visa as long as they have legal status in the U.S. The F-1/J-1 visa only needs to be valid at the time of entry into the U.S. If your visa expires while you are in the U.S., you can still continue to stay here as long as you are maintaining your status. If your visa expires and you have traveled out of the U.S., you will need to apply for a new visa.
- If students must travel out of the country, they should keep in mind the status of visa application operations at the embassy or consulate where they intend to apply, as well as travel and other restrictions in the destination countries visited while out of the U.S. The following links should be closely monitored for the latest information on the status of embassies and consulates around the world:
  - The Department of State website for the status of operations at the embassy where students intend to apply for a visa
  - Visa wait times at various embassies
- Students should also be mindful of U.S. government-imposed travel restrictions that may lead to problems with re-entry into the U.S.
- Students should also consider the implications of their travel on immigration benefits such as OPT.

We also have a lot of useful information related to travel and visa application on our website.
6. How do the current travel restrictions impact visa applications?

Generally speaking, students from countries not impacted by the travel bans should be able to apply for U.S. visas in their home countries as usual. However, students should check with the embassies or consulates near them as they prepare for their visa applications. We would also recommend checking the Department of State website for the status of operations at the embassy where they intend to apply for a visa.

We would recommend that students continue to monitor the news, airline travel information, and the Rutgers Global website for additional changes or updates. We also have a lot of good information related to travel and visa application on our website.

7. I am a student currently enrolled at another institution in the U.S. Do I need a new visa to begin study at Rutgers in the fall?

You do not need a new visa to begin the new program at Rutgers if you remain in the U.S. while between schools. If you choose to travel internationally, you will need to check with your embassy or consulate to determine if you need to apply for a new visa. If you have a valid visa (valid at the time of expected entry to the U.S.), chances are you won’t need to apply for a new one.

F-1 students can have their record transferred to Rutgers within 60 days of their program completion date at the current school. Your program at Rutgers must begin within five months of the date of last enrollment at your current school (program completion date) or the last date of authorized Optional Practical Training (OPT).

J-1 students can transfer their SEVIS records to Rutgers, but their new program must begin immediately after completion of the current program (no gap allowed).

8. I am an F-1/J-1 student studying on-campus at Rutgers and in my final semester of study at Rutgers. What are my options at this time?

Graduating students have the following options:

- Transfer to a New Institution/Program

  Students in F-1 and J-1 status can transfer their SEVIS records from one school to another. F-1 student SEVIS records can be transferred to a new school within 60 days of the completion of their program at Rutgers. This date is often the degree completion or graduation date. The new program can begin within 5 months of the date of last enrollment at Rutgers (program completion date) or the last date of authorized OPT.

  J-1 Students - Students must begin a new program immediately after completion of the current program (no gap allowed).

  International students can also begin a new program at Rutgers. Please contact ISSS for advice on how best to maintain/update your SEVIS record.

- Change of Status

  Students may consider applying for a change to a different immigration status such as B-1/B-2 tourist visa (or another viable) status to remain in the US. This is an independent petition and students can apply on their own, or work with external lawyers for assistance. The application is filed with the United States Citizenship and Immigration Service (USCIS) and involves a filing fee.

- Optional Practical Training (OPT)/ Academic Training

  F-1 students can apply for post-completion OPT, which grants them employment authorization and an extension of status for 12 months (per advancing degree level) after the completion of their program. This authorization can be extended by another two years for students in approved STEM fields, based on certain eligibility criteria. The application is filed with the United States Citizenship and Immigration Service (USCIS) and involves a filing fee. It provides employment authorization as well as extension of a student’s legal status. Application deadlines must be adhered to.

J-1 students may apply for Academic Training, and work in the U.S. after completion of their program. Academic Training is authorized for a specific job and is processed at ISSS. Legal application deadlines must be adhered to.

- Leave the Country within the Grace Period

  F-1 and J-1 students have a grace period, following the end of their programs, which enables them to remain in the U.S. legally during this time.
  - F-1 students - 60 days after degree completion
  - J-1 students - 30 days after degree completion

9. I am a new student starting my studies in the fall/summer session at Rutgers University. Can I begin my studies in the fall/summer if I cannot come to the U.S. in time?

As a new student, you would need to come into the U.S. and report to Rutgers to activate your SEVIS record and legal status. If you are enrolled for the summer/fall, and unable to come to the U.S., your F-1/J-1 record would need to be deferred to the start of the next semester. You can academically begin in the fall if your department/school provides remote instruction options, but your immigration status would only be activated when you are able to enter the U.S.

Please inform ISSS at isss-students@global.rutgers.edu if you are in this situation and contact our office if you have any other questions.

More information about delayed enrollment, as well as possibly beginning Rutgers enrollment and courses while abroad (using online or other methods), will be outlined in future communications.

10. I am an international student currently abroad, and in a region impacted by COVID-19. I cannot return to the U.S. due to travel restrictions. What should I do?

Students are advised to contact their academic department/school immediately (if they haven’t already) to discuss whether any academic contingency plans are feasible while they are abroad. These may involve:

- Taking classes online while abroad
- Obtaining a leave of absence and withdraw from Rutgers for the semester (SEVIS record would need to be closed)
- Qualifying for reduced credit authorization and maintaining an active SEVIS record
- Graduate students who have completed all coursework and may be able to enroll full-time in research or other non-coursework degree requirements while abroad may be able to maintain an active SEVIS record.

Once an academic plan is agreed upon, students should be directed to contact ISSS immediately to discuss the immigration implications of this plan. There are very limited options to keep a student’s SEVIS status active while outside the U.S. during an academic term.

If the academic plan (and/or a relaxation of federal regulations) allows ISSS to maintain a student’s SEVIS status, we will do so.

If this is not possible, students will be directed to close their SEVIS record and obtain a new immigration document (I-20 or DS-2019) when they are ready to return. This may involve re-activating the currently closed record or issuing a document under a new SEVIS ID based on how long the student remains outside the country from the date of termination of his/her record. ISSS will handle these on a case by case basis.
There are other implications of the actions above, including but not limited to delayed benefits such as Optional Practical Training (OPT), Curricular Practical Training (CPT) or students being required to apply for a new visa. Contact ISSS to discuss these implications.

11. I am an international student in my final semester, currently abroad, and in a region impacted by COVID-19. I cannot return to the U.S. due to travel restrictions. What should I do?

International students who were expecting spring 2020 to be their final semester of study and are not able to complete their programs should apply for an extension of their SEVIS program.

International students unable to return to the U.S. and in their final semester of study (completing their programs while overseas) are faced with the possibility of losing their ability to apply for Optional Practical Training (OPT for F-1 students) or Academic Training (for J-1 students). There is currently no regulatory relief for students caught in this situation. Students should discuss options with an ISSS advisor as soon as possible.

12. I am currently enrolled in a program at Rutgers as an international student (and will be enrolled in the fall semester as well) and I am concerned about returning home for the summer. What should I do?

Continuing students are not required to enroll in courses in the summer. They are eligible to stay in the U.S. without being registered for courses. They may (if they choose) enroll in summer classes or a summer program at Rutgers or at a different institution. Online study is also not restricted during the summer as long as the student was actively enrolled in the spring and intends to be enrolled in traditional in-classes in the fall.

Continuing students are eligible for on-campus employment (full-time or part-time) and may apply for Curricular Practical Training (if eligible).

See answer to question 1 for more travel related details.

13. I am planning to attend Rutgers in the summer or fall and am already in the U.S. What should I do?

New students who are already in the U.S. (in high school, or at a different institution), can have their SEVIS records transferred to Rutgers and stay in the U.S. even if their program at Rutgers begins in the fall.

New students starting at Rutgers during the summer and interested in on or off-campus employment options should consult with ISSS for eligibility.

14. I am an international student on a study abroad exchange program in one of the impacted countries. What should I do?

If the program is cancelled, students may return to their home country. Students have the following options:

- Take a leave of absence (LoA), withdraw for the semester and close their SEVIS records
- Maintain status by enrolling in remote instruction/online courses, unless they qualify for reduced credit authorization under any of the permissible reduced course load exceptions
- In the case that this is a student’s final semester before graduation, and the student is unable to return to the U.S., they would lose their OPT eligibility (according to current policy). Students in this situation should consult with a Rutgers ISSS advisor immediately.
15. I have been re-admitted to Rutgers for the summer; how does the current crisis impact my situation?

Students who are in the U.S. (possibly at another institution, e.g. a community college) can transfer their records back to Rutgers.

Students who are outside the U.S. and were looking to return over the summer may face travel restrictions (based on when they are looking to return and the travel restrictions at the time). If they are unable to return, their readmission as well as their immigration status may have to be deferred. Since their SEVIS records are closed, students may take online classes as offered by their school/department while overseas.

Students will need to contact an advisor at ISSS for guidance on the appropriate way to obtain a new I-20 when they are able to return. Based on the period of their absence from the country (less than 5 months or more than 5 months), the action recommended will be different.

Please review the information on our “Returning to Rutgers” section of our website for more details.

16. I am currently in the U.S. but quarantined (or self-isolated) and unable to attend classes due to medical reasons. What should I do?

International students may submit a request to ISSS for consideration of a Medical Reduced Course Load exception to normal full-time enrollment requirements if they are unable to maintain their full-time studies for a medical reason. The quarantine or required self-isolation would qualify as a medical reason. International students should carefully assess the individual need for such an exception in light of the university's temporary utilization of remote education through April 3.

17. My on-campus housing contract expires at the end of the semester, but I cannot return home under the current circumstances. Is there any way to extend my contract?

Rutgers is considering the needs of students after the spring semester. No final decisions have yet been made. Information will be shared once it is available.

For information and resources regarding off-campus housing, please contact the Office of Off-Campus Living and Community Partnerships.

18. I am worried about the reduced services on-campus – what dining services are open during this time?

Please check the Dining Services website for the latest operating status of dining halls. In accordance with social distancing measures, starting Monday, March 16, all locations operated by Dining Services will only offer items in takeout containers or prepackaged items. All dining rooms will be closed until further notice. If you need assistance regarding having access to food, we encourage you to contact the Dean of Students Office, who can assist by connecting you with the appropriate campus and community-based resources. The Rutgers Student Food Pantry is another resource for those concerned regarding access to food.

Visit the Rutgers Transportation Services website for information on the modified bus schedules and more.
